PLENARY SESSION 1
THE ASIA-PACIFIC SECURITY AGENDA: THE NEXT 25 YEARS
Looking back at the past 25 years, the Asia Pacific has, on the whole, been remarkably peaceful and stable. Predictions of the imminent clash of the big powers have not materialised. While there are extant issues such as territorial disputes, conflicts over resources and nation building, the countries of the region have cooperated like never before. But what will the next 25 years look like? This session will explore how regional countries can cooperate to maintain peace and stability in the Asia Pacific. What are the key security challenges that should command the most attention and resources? What are the new sources of insecurity looming across the horizon? What should be the roles of institutions such as the ASEAN Regional Forum, the ASEAN Defence Ministers’ Meeting (ADMM) and the ADMM Plus?

Moderator

PLENARY SESSION 2
CHINA: LESS CHARM, MORE OFFENSIVE?
In the past year, many observers of China’s foreign policy have argued that Beijing has become increasingly assertive on the international stage. This session will closely examine the proposition that China has become more willing to use its growing economic and military strengths to support its regional and international diplomacy. In what ways have broader geopolitical developments led to the apparent shift in China’s foreign policy? What are the possible domestic sources of its recent posture? What explains China’s reported declaration that the South China Sea constitutes a “core interest”? Are we witnessing the end of Beijing’s highly successful diplomatic initiative, labelled by some, as a “charm offensive”? While China would continue to “rise”, will it remain “peaceful” in its conduct of external relations?

LUNCHEON TALK 1
EAST ASIA REGIONALISM: THE VIEW FROM JAKARTA
As the largest country in Southeast Asia, Indonesia has played a major role in influencing the shape and composition of ASEAN-led regional institutions in East Asia. This session will provide an Indonesian assessment of the present state and future direction of regionalism in East Asia. How does Jakarta perceive the roles of the numerous regional processes? Will ASEAN continue to be a major pillar in Indonesia’s foreign policy? How does regionalism in East Asia serve Indonesia’s strategic interests? How do the various parts of the regional architecture influence the interaction between the major powers? How does Indonesia reconcile its bilateral and multilateral initiatives?

Moderator
The Hon. Dato’ Sri ANIFAH Aman
Minister of Foreign Affairs, Malaysia (invited)

Speaker
The Hon. Dr. Raden Mohammad MARTY Muliana Natalegawa
Minister of Foreign Affairs, Indonesia

PLENARY SESSION 3
ARE CHINA AND THE US ON A COLLISION COURSE?
Relations between China and the United States in the last two decades have generally been characterised by a mix of cooperation and competition. In the past year, however, tensions between Beijing and Washington have decidedly intensified. The latter sees the former as mounting a challenge to its primacy in Asia. Beijing, on the other hand, believes that Washington is strengthening its alliances and partnerships in Asia in an attempt to encircle China. This session will assess how Sino-American relations will likely develop in the near future. What can be done to prevent a further intensification of Sino-American rivalry? What are the prospects that the two countries would start treating each other as equals?

CONCURRENT SESSION 1
WATER: QUENCHING THE THIRST FOR SECURITY
The populations of the Asia Pacific are expected to continue to grow for the foreseeable future. This creates enormous pressures on governments to ensure the continued supply of water. But measures taken by one country may not always benefit another when it comes to managing scarce resources. In other words, water is increasingly politicised, and indeed some would argue that it should be securitised. This session will assess the ways in which regional countries are trying to secure the supply of water and how these affect interstate relations, including heightening political tensions between upstream and downstream states. What are the main sources of water stress in the Asia Pacific? How can cooperation between regional countries be improved? Will the rivers and lakes turn red from the blood spilled as the pressure to secure the source and supply of water intensifies?

CONCURRENT SESSION 2
ASIA’S NAVAL ARMS RACE: MYTH OR REALITY?
The nations of the Asia Pacific are presently channelling ever-greater resources towards strengthening their navies. Advanced submarines, for instance, have been built and purchased on an unprecedented scale. The electronic warfare (EW) capabilities of regional maritime forces are improving swiftly. As a result, many regional countries now have the ability to apply force at sea with growing potency. This session will discuss the driving forces and rationale for this new phenomenon. Is the US inadvertently fuelling the purported arms race with its increasingly active military engagement in the region? What can be done to moderate the negative consequences of the competitive arms build-up? Are recent naval purchases tantamount to an arms race? Are these acquisitions better understood in terms of “modernisation” and the replacement of obsolete equipment? Is the purported military build-up a manifestation of the simmering strategic conflict that also involves the US?

PLENARY SESSION 4
DAWN OF THE ASIAN CENTURY: PROSPECTS AND CHALLENGES
The term “Asian Century” is often used – and according to some, much abused – in the popular press. This session will continue the discussions that began at the 24th Asia-Pacific Roundtable. It will examine the merits of the concept of an Asian Century. What do we actually mean when we use the term? In other words, what are the attitudes and key assumptions that lie behind calling the twenty-first century an Asian one? Does the concept help or hinder our understanding of geopolitical developments around the world?

PLENARY SESSION 5
RETHINKING THE ZONE OF PEACE, FREEDOM AND NEUTRALITY (ZOPFAN) IN THE POST-COLD WAR ERA

The ZOPFAN declaration of 1971 was the result of concerns that the superpower rivalry of the Cold War could undermine Southeast Asia’s stability. Forty years after ZOPFAN was first articulated, it continues to figure in ASEAN’s official statements. This session will discuss whether ASEAN’s commitment to ZOPFAN is more than just a rhetorical one. What is the role of ZOPFAN in creating an ASEAN Security Community? How is it relevant to today’s regional strategic landscape?

PLENARY SESSION 7
THE ADMM PLUS: YET ANOTHER LAYER IN THE REGION’S DENSE SECURITY ARCHITECTURE?
The First ASEAN Defence Minsters’ Meeting (ADMM) Plus was convened amid considerable fanfare in Hanoi in October 2010. Some analysts have posited that the establishment of the ADMM Plus has long been overdue. Yet it remains unclear whether the ADMM Plus can achieve progress on issues where other mechanisms have been found wanting. This session will assess whether the ADMM Plus has a unique role to play in enhancing regional security. What explains the establishment of the ADMM Plus? What are the respective roles of the ADMM Plus and the ASEAN Regional Forum? Is there a need to clearly delineate them? Is the ADMM Plus attempting to skirt around the pressing concerns of traditional security by steadfastly identifying non-traditional security issues as the primary concern of the enlarged entity?

UNRAVELLING THE THAI POLITICAL PUZZLE

A year after the May 2010 dispersal of the protests by the “Red Shirts” in Bangkok, there are lingering doubts about whether the principal causes of instability in Thai politics have been sufficiently addressed. This session will explore why such doubts remain and examine the steps that have been taken by the Thai government to narrow the political chasm between the contending groups. Who have been the key personalities in Thai politics over the past year? What has been done to narrow the economic gap between Thailand’s northeast and the rest of the country? What is the likelihood of mass protests returning to the streets of Thailand’s major cities? Is there light at the end of the tunnel? What would a solution to the Thai political quagmire look like?

CONCURRENT SESSION 4

WIKILEAKS: IMPLICATIONS FOR DIPLOMACY AND INTELLIGENCE EXCHANGE

The release of classified US diplomatic cables by WikiLeaks has been described as the “9/11 of diplomacy”. This session will assess the implications of the disclosures, particularly on relations and intelligence exchange between states. How have governments managed the diplomatic fallout from the leaked documents? How can governments strike a balance between sharing their assessments with other countries and the need to maintain secrecy? Has WikiLeaks significantly undermined the collection of intelligence, particularly by the United States? Is this a one-off, or should we expect such disclosures to happen frequently in the future? What will be the long-term impact of WikiLeaks on diplomacy?

DINNER TALK
JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES: WHERE IS THE ALLIANCE HEADED?
The US-Japan security alliance is the cornerstone of US-Japanese relations, and remains an important facet of regional security. While Washington and Tokyo agree on the importance of their alliance, managing it has not been all smooth sailing. This session will discuss the recent trajectory of Japan-US relations and examine its interaction with other strategic developments in the region. What are the key factors that have shaped the Japan-US relationship in the past five years? How has Japan’s security concerns influenced US strategy in Asia? Does Japan see the US security umbrella as sustainable in the long run? What have been the domestic factors that have shaped Japan’s approach towards its alliance with the United States?

DAY 3
1 June 2011

09:00 – 10:00
PLENARY SESSION 8
SECURING THE MARITIME COMMONS: THE ROLE OF REGIONAL NAVIES
As Asia-Pacific countries expand their trading links across the globe, securing the region’s maritime commons has become critical to their wealth and security. The threat of piracy, though much subsided in recent years, remains a source of worry. The development of anti-access technologies carries the potential to deepen suspicions between the major maritime powers. This session will explore how regional navies can cooperate to secure the maritime commons and forestall the risk of turning mutual suspicions into armed conflict. How can current cooperation to secure the maritime commons be improved? What can be done to build trust between the major maritime powers?

WHERE IS NORTH KOREA HEADED?
The Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK) is ostensibly prepared for a leadership transition. Yet, there remain huge gaps in the outside world’s knowledge of key personalities in the country’s political and military leadership. At the same time, bilateral relations between the DPRK and the Republic of Korea (ROK), Japan, and the United States respectively have often been punctuated by tension. This session will examine the recent developments in the DPRK and assess their implications for the Asia Pacific. In what ways have preparations for a political transition in the DPRK influenced its foreign policy? How has the DPRK responded to broader geopolitical developments? What has been the role of the Korean People’s Army (KPA) in shaping the DPRK’s approach towards the other former participants of the Six Party Talks?
